The Farm Schools.

More than five hundred students are expected to enroll at the agricultural schools of Alberta this fall, beating all previous records. The foreman demand for accommodation has caused the Government to reopen the school at Raymond, closed years ago in the supposition that it was not required.

Next to the announcement that a higher percentage than ever before of the children of the province are in the public schools, this is about as good news as could come from our educational institutions.

It means that more of the farm boys and girls are able and anxious to take advantage of the chance to qualify themselves for better farming. Along the road of that ambitious line, however, any farming country, and in Alberta perhaps more surely than in any other.

Alberta is a long way from the markets in which it must sell its agricultural products. If it is to sell at a satisfactory profit it must sell the best. Nothing less than that can pay the freight.

The Alberta farm schools were established with a view to teaching young Albertans of both sexes how to farm to the best advantage; that is, how to produce the highest grade of everything from dairy products to grain and stock.

Upon the number of students who take advantage of the courses these schools offer will depend very largely the standing of Alberta farm products abroad, the prestige of the province as an agricultural province, and the welfare and contentment of the people on the land.

Why Not Try It Out?

Every one in a while a moderate amount of interest is awakened in Edmonton by the news that somebody in California or England or Germany has heard about the McMurtry tar sands, and may be induced to take a look at them, have them analyzed, and, as a remote possibility, put some money into some kind of a concern to do something or other with them.

For twenty years we have been talking about the McMurtry tar sands, and there has been no result. A valuable natural resource which could and assuredly would be the basis for a huge industrial development of some kind or other. And for the same length of time we have done nothing more than talk about them. For all practical purposes that deposit might as well have been located on the moon.

For years we have had a railway built to McMurtry, at a very considerable cost to the people of the Province, and a train running over it simultaneously, where there was any freight, to be hauled. But so far as bringing the McMurtry tar sands into use the railway might as well be in Ungava.

Isn't it about time to stop scanning the far horizons of the universe for some philanthropic financier who will come along and show us what to do with the tar sands and then do it for us?

How would it be, for a change, if the city arranged with Hon. Vernon Smith to bring down a trained and/or of the tar sands, just as it is, to a well-gravelled and properly constructed street, and then found out by experiment just what that deposit is worth as a road-surfacing material?

The Power to Dissolve Parliament.

From the political events of the summer, an image draws the mind to the question of the power to dissolve Parliament. Parliament should never be dissolved without its own direct consent, and after a resolution calling for dissolution has been carried by vote of a majority of its members.

The assumption seems to be that dissolution of Parliament is a public calamity, and that which rules of procedure, traditions and statutes should be revised to the effect of empowering the members to hold their seats to the end of the term if they want to, come what may.

Had that rule been in force during the hotie of June last, our Premier King would have carried a resolution for dissolution through the House of Commons? It is not at all likely, considering the obvious desire of a controlling minority to keep clear of electioneering.

Could Premier Meighen have carried such a motion a few days or weeks later? Almost certainly he could not. The Liberals would not willingly consent to go to the polls with Hon. Robert Rogers in control of the machinery, and the Progressive bolters would have "stood pat" on Mr. Guthrie's promise that there would be no dissolution.

Dissolution only by consent of Parliament would in all probability have meant that we would still be at Ottawa a Government without mandate from Parliament or people, operating public funds on warrant of the Governor-General; with the inglorious prospect of four years more of dead-lock.

That the members of Parliament should have power to prevent dissolution is important only when dissolution is most needed; and when in the public interests it is necessary that some one, the Premier, should have authority to prevent a condition of stalemate and give the electors a chance to create a Parliament capable of functioning.

When a Premier has a working majority behind him he has little temptation to needlessly put the country to the expense of a general election, and the strongest possible reason for doing so is that his supporters agree. A formal motion for dissolution is not needed when it could be carried.

When a Premier is trying to carry on with

The Choice

By EDGAR A. GUEST

When all is said and done,
And every sage is heard
Through deep truth's channels run
Not by the spoken word,
Nor by the dream alone
Is life made fair and sweet,
And life's true crown is wear
And each must tread his road.

Still waits this choice for all,
Which way to turn is best?
Or just what time must fall
The price men strive to earn?
Which man wins more dignity
The noble or the base?
And knowing wrong from right
Which gains the happier place?

For life is lived with men,
And men must live with men,
Which way is better then?
The truth of men to earn?
Would not men choose to be
The drunkard to the sober?
The miser to the poor?
Who does his duty well?

Through all life's loss and gain
To every man and every hour,
This truth must still remain
To govern and to guide,
The happiest life he lives,
Who walks in honesty,
Is clean of hand and gives
His best to every day.

The Curse of the Race

By DR. FRANK CRANE

It might not be to forget that the chief curse of the human race is war. Taking into consideration not only the death but the loss of life, the loss of property, the loss of the human and the material, and the enormous suffering of millions of human beings, the threatened bankruptcy of many nations, no calamity looms more portentous than another war.

The feeling that crime was an evil, that there are national boundaries and rivalries. There are tariffs which interfere with the natural flow of commerce. There are fears of one nation directed against others, and there is that constant display of military might, where in the world.

In the studies of living men the terrible effects of war are seen. It is not only the loss of life and property, but the loss of the human and the material, and the enormous suffering of millions of human beings, the threatened bankruptcy of many nations, no calamity looms more portentous than another war.

The church itself makes many mistakes, but at least it is trying to improve the human race. As long as it is doing something it is not to be ridiculed and hindered by those who are doing nothing. The efforts of those who are doing nothing, and those who are doing nothing, are the real friends of mankind.

THE WINDOWS OF THE SOUL

The eyes speak with a eloquence and truthfulness which surpasses speech. They are the windows through which one can easily see into the soul of friend or stranger. We see the look of the lion or the lamb, of the saint or the sinner, of the lover or the enemy, and that first look into strange eyes will often tell a tale far different from the story he tells you with language trained and cultivated to effect his hidden purpose. One even conducts a much controlled by the fact that other people can see and observe our actions.

How different we would act if we knew that everyone in the world but ourselves were blind. How changed would be our dress, our every action! The questioning, critical glance of our neighbor keeps us always as an actor on the stage of life. Yet, how true it is that no two people treat the same to the same visual stimulus. We are always limited in our reactions to a slight stimulus by the amount of understanding we have of what we see. The artist affected by a landscape in a very different way from the realist. The artist perhaps sees more of the beauty in the natural colors of the rolling hills, while the realist dreams his vision of a profitable and practical sub-
